

We believe that reform strategies for the educationally disadvantaged that focus on the school system alone will continue to fail “children in need.”

We have learned from experience that effective strategies reaching beyond the traditional boundaries of schooling and providing early and sustained intervention in the lives of disadvantaged children can break this vicious cycle of disaffection and despair.

Committee for Economic Development
Children in Need
September, 1987